DONALD M. HAYES,
M.D.

Born in Kings Mountain, North Carolina, on November 6, 1928, Donald Hayes received his Bachelor of Science degree from Wake Forest College in 1951. He attended the Bowman Gray School of Medicine, where in 1954 he became a Doctor of Medicine.

Dr. Hayes spent 1954-55 as a medical intern at the Salt Lake County General Hospital in Salt Lake City, Utah. The following year, 1955-56, was spent as a Fellow in Psychiatry at Louisville General Hospital, Louisville, Kentucky. He then returned to the North Carolina Baptist Hospital where he served as an assistant resident in medicine during 1956-57 and as a resident in 1957-58. During the years 1958-60 Dr. Hayes was a Fellow in Hematology.

Appointed to the Bowman Gray faculty in 1959, Dr. Hayes served two years (1960-61) as Assistant Dean in Charge of Admissions before returning to full-time teaching, research, and patient care. He was named Assistant Professor in 1961 and Associate Professor in 1966.

Dr. Hayes is well known to the entire student body. During the freshman year he assists with the Perspectives in Medicine course. Second year students know him as an instructor in both Physical Diagnosis and Preventive Medicine. For the third year class he serves as both lecturer in medicine and as ward consultant. Senior students are involved with him both in the hematology clinic and on his private service.

Not only is Dr. Hayes an active teacher of students, he is also an active researcher, having more than two dozen papers to his credit. In addition to his investigative and teaching activities, he has an active medical practice.

Despite his busy schedule, Dr. Hayes has always found the time to spend with students in the clinic, classroom, and ward, as well as in his home. It is with much gratitude for the four years he has spent with us that the Class of 1968 dedicates this book to Dr. Hayes—who has been both a gifted teacher and a warm friend to each one of us.

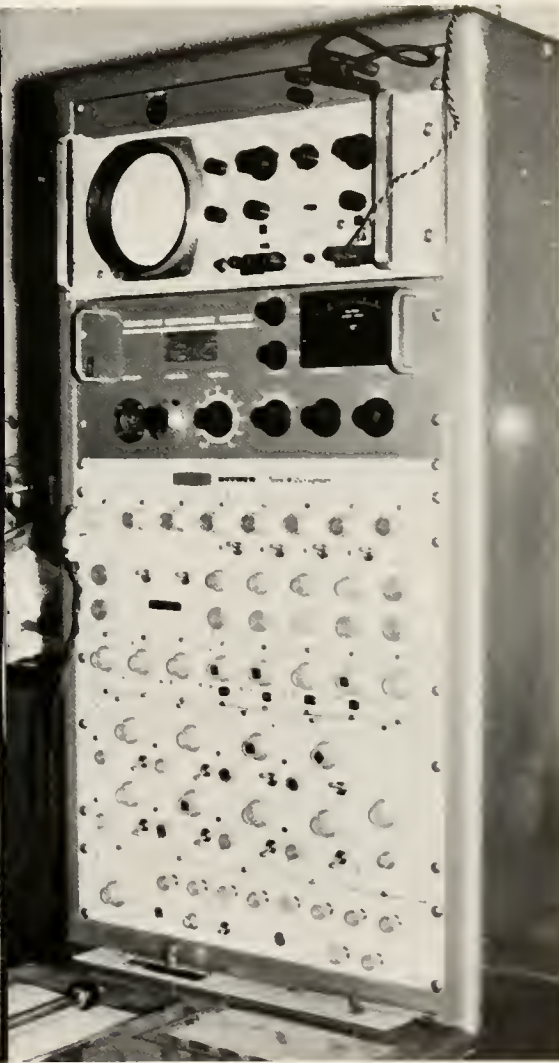

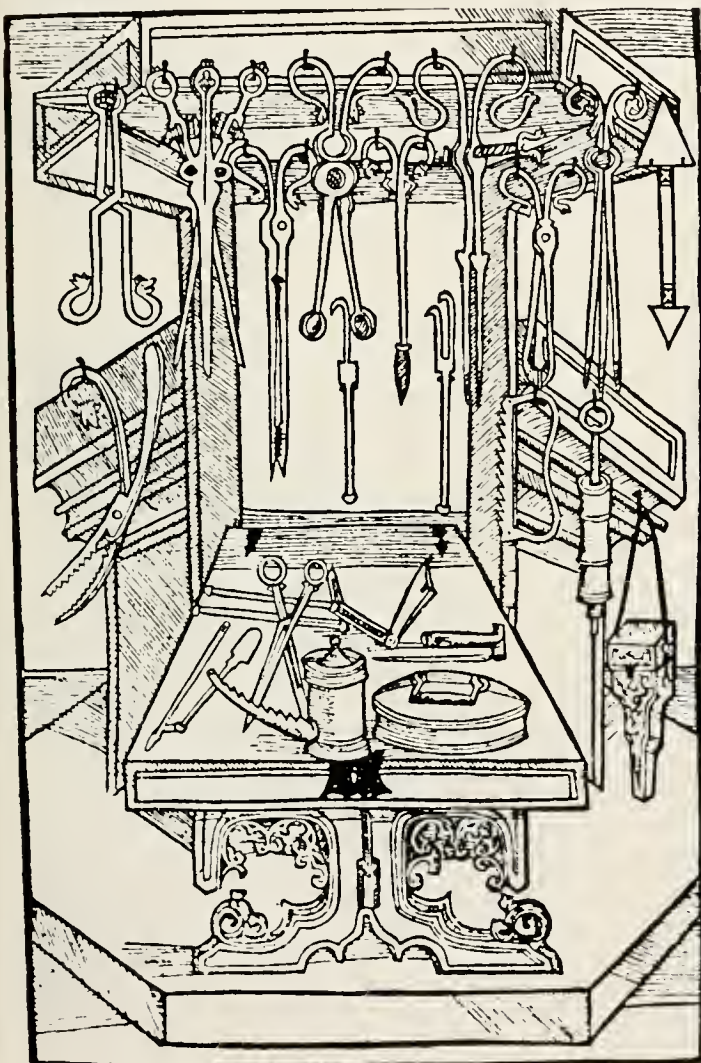

From the Freshman

with his anatomy dissections, discovering anew the structures described centuries before, to the seniors receiving their academic hoods, symbolic vestiges of another era, the experience of medical school and what lies beyond is but an additional chapter in the continuum of medical development.

Beginning with the ancient practioners deified in the hazy dawn of pre-history, and continuing to the modern physician, armed with a myraid of technological advances, there stretches a thread of continuity—a continuity of which all of us are a part.

During these brief four years

we were taught by many, both in the class room and at the bed side, and before we had received our diplomas, several were handing on the knowledge they had received to those who were following not very far behind.

Instruments

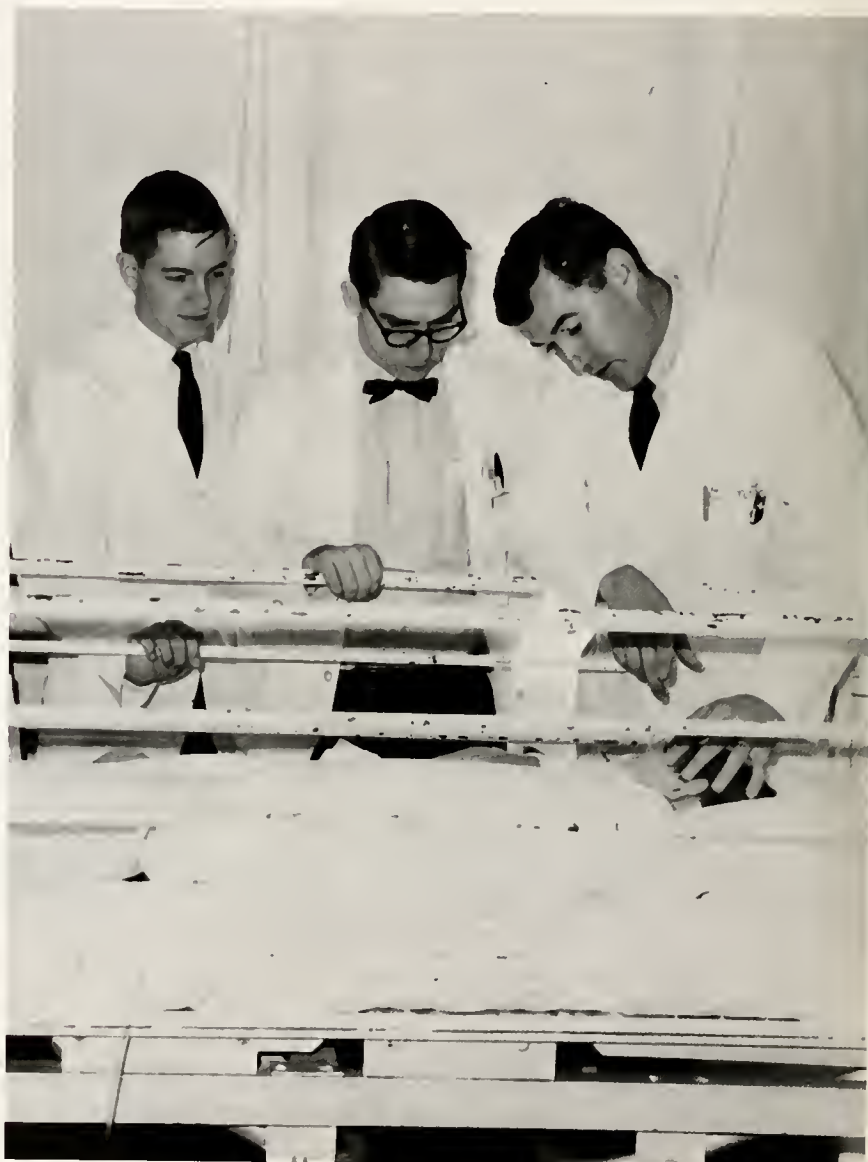

and syndromes—all evolved from an existing need or a modification of what already existed, the latter itself perhaps a modification of what had been used or described before. The signs, the tests, the drugs—these have all been part of the progression which has contributed to the total medical knowledge of today. And yet things which were learned as freshmen may be useless to seniors, having been replaced by newer investigations and observations by men who are all contributing to a succession of facts which is as old as the art, indeed, as old as man himself.

The practice of contemporary medicine is not an isolated entity, free in time, but rather part of a stream which has its origin in man himself and which grows in depth and breadth with each generation.

As we leave our formal academic training and prepare to go our separate ways, we shall try to be ever mindful of our great indebtedness to the past and our obligation to the future.

ACADEMICS

COY CARPENTER, M.D.

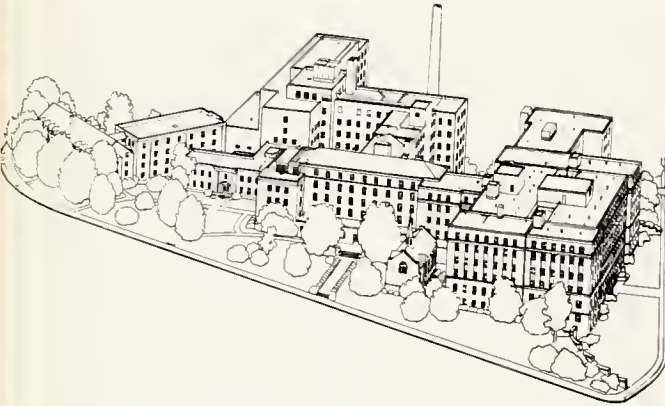

Dr. Coy Carpenter is not very well known to the Class of 1968. Nevertheless, without him there might not be a Bowman Gray School of Medicine today. It is said that he took a shoe string and made a shoe. It is only fitting at his retirement to remember how Dr. Carpenter's school was founded.

In 1939 the Bowman Gray Foundation offered its entire resources to the University of North Carolina Medical School if it would move from Chapel Hill to Winston-Salem and change from a two year to a four year program. At that time the American Medical Association was strongly opposed to two year medical schools and had recommended that all either be closed or be expanded to four year programs. The cost of such a transition was estimated to be $10,000,000. The University of North Carolina, faced with American Medical Association pressure either to close or to expand, nevertheless decided to remain a two year school rather than change location. Dr. Carpenter, who had been dean of the Wake Forest Medical School since 1936, saw the possibilities and proposed to the Bowman Gray Foundation that they make their generous offer to his school. The foundation did and within one day the offer was accepted; the medical school was moved to Winston-Salem with the promise of becoming a four year school.

It seemed that this offer had solved the school's greatest problem. Unfortunately this optimism was unjustified. Dr. Carpenter had assumed that the Foundation had assets of a minimum of $5,000,000, when in fact there was little more than one-tenth that amount. When this fact became public, Dr. Carpenter received acid criticism, both from faculty members and national educational figures—all charging him with gross misrepresentation. Many scars still remain from the bitter feelings engendered at that time. Fortunately, Dr. Carpenter was able to borrow large sums of money using his R.J. Reynolds Tobacco stock as collateral. In addition he elicited generous and substantial help from the Reynolds and Gray families; and, despite some Baptist objections, obtained much help from the federal government, then eager to produce more physicians during the years of World War II. His recruitment of nationally recognized faculty members further strengthened the school.

The next great expansion program is now in progress. Although Dr. Carpenter had planned to retire in 1970, he stepped aside in 1967 in order that Dr. Manson Meads could direct the program from its inception.

The story of the Bowman Gray School of Medicine is the story of Dr. Coy Carpenter. As the late Dr. Fred Hares of Duke University said when he received the first honorary degree given by the Bowman Gray School of Medicine, "In 1941 I knew well that it couldn't be done. In 1951—now that it has been done—I don't believe it."

The Bowman Gray School of Medicine and the North Carolina Baptist Hospital at the time of Dr. Carpenter's retirement.

HISTORY OF THE CLASS OF 1968

The class history to follow summarizes those events and highlights which are unique to the Class of 1968. It is hoped that this recollection of our four years at Bowman Gray will provide some of the nostalgia of these years, which we will recall from time to time in the future. While much of the history contains humorous and pleasant events along with satire and exaggerations, it is hoped that these more superficial recollections will provide the stimulus for recalling the more serious and personal experiences.

It should be mentioned that this class history also shares a common theme which occurs in every medical school in the country; it is the theme of the molding and evolution of a physician. Four years is a short time in which to accumulate so much knowledge and to actually apply this material in a clinical situation with a sick person. Beneath the class jokes is a sense of seriousness and dedication in all of us of our own responsibility in being trained and allowed to help a suffering human being. The Class of 1968 thanks the faculty for helping us to reach our cherished goal, that of becoming a doctor.

The history of the Class of 1968 began with the final decision of those students who were accepted to matriculate at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine, and thus on Thursday, September 10, 1964, fifty-six students from fifteen states and nineteen colleges met for the first time at the beginning of orientation. Dean Meads spoke first, welcoming us and stating how statistically we were the finest group yet to be accepted. (Note: It is rumored that each year this same phrase is used.) Dr. Tuttle presented a general outline of the curriculum planned for us over the next four years. Cakes and coffee were served in the library, providing a time for all to become better acquainted.

The class then proceeded over the remaining two and one-half days of orientation, which included tours of the school conducted by upperclassmen (some of whom wore white pants and coats, and even had stethoscopes), lining up to have our pictures taken for the year book and "the pink book," buying required texts including Psychological Development and Marriage Counseling, and listening to talks by Drs. Hutaff and Tuttle which were designed to make us relaxed and yet to prepare us for Monday morning.

The evenings during orientation were devoted to groups of us having dinner in the homes of various members of the faculty. On Saturday evening most of us with our wives or "dates" (Note: most of the class was single then) walked back and forth between the two fraternity house parties, eating Japanese food at one and dancing at the other. Following the parties was Sunday, "the longest day," because the next day was the first class in our medical school training; all the uncertainties and fears had twenty-four hours to develop since at that time we didn't know about "working it out, playing it out, talking it out, or praying it out."

Monday morning fifty-six clean white coats with unmarked books and all on time met in room 465 for the first lecture on embryology and histology. That afternoon we met our cadavers and greased their heads, and no one got sick as portrayed in the movies. The first day ended with the meal in the cafeteria as most of us carefully scrutinized the student nurses. The first day's work was not as bad as we expected, but we read chapter one in our books that evening like it was the gospel itself.

The next days picked up in tempo as the quality and quantity of the work made itself felt; but although we all kept up with our work, there was a vague feeling starting to build in our bodies about "how much are we really expected to know," and "oh, they can't expect us to remember all this," and "just do the best you can"; but then the Gestapo session came, and the picture of what was expected was made more exact.

Anatomy laboratory found the surgeons of the class trying to identify the femoral artery and locate the superficial branches of the superficial nerves trunk supplying the superficial fascia. Histology lab saw budding "Frank Netters" accurately drawing elastic fibers after several hours.

The first four weeks suddenly had passed and now we had the first anatomy exam with ring, one minute, ring (I swear it was only forty-five seconds), ring. Most of us will never forget the lower G-I complaints which accompanied the hard days of study preceding that exam. The next exams still caused much anxiety, but the intensity decreased until the first orals, or roundtable embarrassments ("yeah, it's right behind the . . . the . . . the belly-button, Dr. Bo").

Recollection of the last desperate days in the gross lab prior to a practical was truly a sight to behold. Each student had his own method of learning his anatomy with self quizzes, coloring of the vessels, looking at adjacent cadavers, looking at other students studying adjacent cadavers, studying the skeleton, the bone boxes, and of course the view boxes (the what?!).

Besides gross and histo, the other main course was neuroanatomy, a contest in the mastering of speed writing. No one will forget the learning, forgetting, and relearning of the thalamic nuclei and the long tract signs that began to accompany our studying.

If the reader wishes to know why so much detail is being spent on the first semester, it is because it was this first semester which was so emotionally trying to many of us. Passing these first courses was the passing of a great milestone because one felt if I can make it through this, then I can make it the rest of the way. This survival of the first semester provided us with confidence.

Students enjoying leisure time before an eight o'clock lecture

Christmas vacation finally came after fourteen weeks and we visited our families where we were "thought" to be smart. We even got gifts to entertain with, a hammer and stethoscope. Vacation seemed to pass too quickly, or was it that finals got closer; anyway, finals arrived and we took them in stride with less spasticity.

When it was all over, that Saturday night at Tanglewood the ethanol and beer flowed, and we just swayed and jumped to the music (Note: The type of music played required no actual dancing, just swaying and jumping).

During the second semester the class was to be enlightened in biochemistry and microbiology. A classic bit of the latter may be summarized thusly: The Actinobacillus is a gram resistant rod-shaped pleomorphic cocci in groups of chains which appear blue-green on P-K agar under a Wood's lamp. It grows best at 37°C, better at 40°C, and worst at 45°C. It causes atypical URI's, G-I upset, G-U and neuromuscular disorders. But of all diseases, orf is the most notorious. Characteristics of the infection are fever, malaise, aches, malaise, nausea, malaise, black eschars, and malaise. Its phage type is RA-7. Treatment, of course, antibiotics.

Biochemistry was summarized by an understanding of important handouts such as the pentose shunt and the enzyme kinetic graphs.

It is hoped that the reader understands that the satire in these courses is just a rebound effect, and I-form, or isomer, of the great quantity of detailed material which we had to learn. Our class now fully realized that the learning and understanding of the terms and concepts presented in those basic science courses help us time and time again in the learning and mastering of medical knowledge.

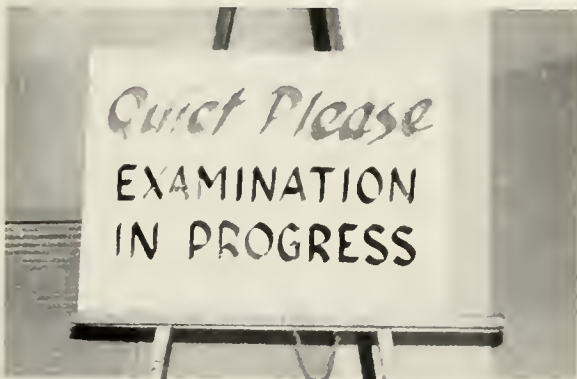

Although the second semester presented us with material which required detailed learning, the class seemed to accept this without the spasticity and anxiety so characteristic of the previous semester. Yes, we were becoming veterans of the quiz, but it took us until the second year to perfect this talent expertly.

Relaxing between State Boards

State boards in progress

National Boards, Part I

The second year consisted predominantly of pathology, physiology, and pharmacology. Our class was the first to use, learn, master, memorize, and rewrite Dr. Morehead's Human Pathology. It took Dr. Morehead twenty-five years to accumulate and organize the facts in his book, yet it took us only seven months to learn it—all of it!! To help us we used a learning aid called the rotation method, which was designed to "meet the needs of the individual." We also were aided by another learning tool, the daily pop quiz. Sometimes these daily pop quizzes, plus the scheduled pop quizzes in physiology and pharmacology all came in the same week, so that taking five or ten quizzes in a week became a way of life. All of this was designed to help us for the National Boards; multiple choice questions were designed thusly:

- Answer A if 1, 2, and 3 are correct
 B if 1 and 3 are correct
 C if 2 and 4 are correct
 D if only 4 is correct
 E all of the above
 F none of the above
 G some other combination
 H some of the above some of the time
 I none of the above none of the time

Pathology has left us with other pleasant memories of "Good morning," "conspicuous by its absence," "Class I and Class II intermediate tumors," "Good morning," "Fish flesh," "Like a cow pasture," "Smelly, greasy, and firm," "Does or does not the capsule strip with ease—answer only 'does' or 'does not,' not 'yes' or 'no'," and "Good morning."

Physiology and pharmacology did not instruct us by a rotation method, but rather by utilizing eight hour sessions in room 183, the "Turkish Bath." We had lectures about shock (?), color blindness, underwater and overwater medicine. Study aids included handouts of a voluminous nature, some even marked as late as 1964, diuretic laboratories, and lastly the Ishihara color charts. Yes, our class worked very, very hard trying to keep physiology, pharmacology, and pathology "under control."

We also had twenty-six one hour sessions in psychiatry.

The last eight weeks of the sophomore year were composed of a set of transitional courses which included physical diagnosis; clinical pathology, or how to learn to do lab work (I wonder what you use this for?); preventive medicine (Remember, only you can prevent VD); and radiology.

During these final eight weeks, which were also entitled "Fat City" because the pressure was at its all time low, we learned how to observe, palpate, percuss, auscultate, and do venous puncture (being happy at this time with a 50% success rate). But lurking in the background of this calm low pressure atmosphere was National Boards, Part I.

Most of us enjoyed "Fat City," but no smile of relief, security, or accomplishment could be made until June 21 and 22, 1966 had passed. Many of us took swimming exercises at a motel in Raleigh the week prior to National Boards when we took our North Carolina State Boards. National Boards were really as difficult as we had heard, but somehow after the twelve hours of six tests of mental anguish, and thanks to Mr. Bell's curve, we survived.

We passed the basic science years and now we were ready to utilize some of this massive amount of knowledge in actual clinical practice. We were students of the classroom and veterans of quizzes, but only tyros as doctors with the true tests of our practical intellect and moral fiber still untried and unknown.

September 13, 1966 began for us what is termed the clinical years, the years of being "one of the floors," in the lab, on rounds, in the lab, in the amphitheater, in the lab, and with the patients. Yes indeed, we were the iii c.c. September was a traumatic month for both us, the house staff, the nurses, and the patient because, in mild words, we didn't know what we were doing.

The page operator announced our names prefixed with "Doctor"; however, this provided a short lived thrill because it was probably a request from the ward clerk to do a urine and c.b.c., a stat LE prep, to restart an IV, to pass this tube through that orifice or sphincter.

We rotated through surgery and observed the procedure of holding the retractor, and as we improved we were permitted to close the skin. We learned the beginning of a series of pearls; the pearl for surgery was "When in doubt, drain it out."

On medicine we did our sickle cell preps, gastric analyses, and wrote twelve page workups including the social history. Rarely, these dissertations were read and countersigned. The pearl for medicine was "When in doubt, SMA-100 it out."

On Ob-Gyn we "learned the course of labor through constant observation at the bedside," delivered the placenta, and watched the two basic procedures, the D&C and hysterectomy. The pearl for Ob-Gyn was "When in doubt, scrape it out."

On Pediatrics an astute clinician danced and pranced and blew the house down, but we admired him for his vast knowledge of children and infants, who, by the way, are not little adults. The pearl was "When in doubt, give H₂O, silly." Peace.

Yes, although jokes are made and some mockery cast at the various services, the third year provided us with the first opportunity to treat the patient, the whole patient; to tie our knowledge together and realize the importance of the basic science years; to realize that the patient is a human being and not just a disease, and that he calls us Doctor and trusts us. This sense of responsibility which was thrust upon us sobered us to the fact that the profession for which we were being trained was one of unique interpersonal experience and the class accepted this challenge of responsibility to dedicate ourselves to becoming the best physician we could. Above all else, we learned that it is the patient who is most important. During the third year the class was becoming doctors, but the additional experience of the senior year was needed and looked forward to.

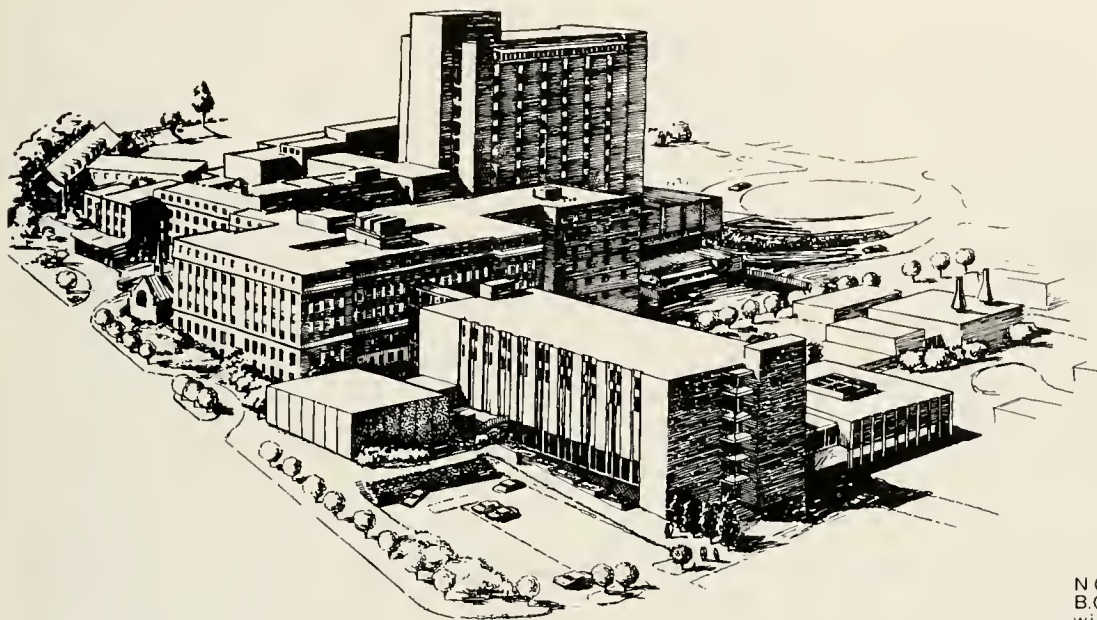

The senior year provided the class with the opportunities to develop our clinical skills still further. Because we had been through the various services once before, we were familiar with what was expected of us and thus could devote more time to becoming more adept in particular areas. Responsibility increased tremendously during the last year with much time being spent in the out patient clinics and the emergency room.

No escape from the IV's

There was always a c.b.c.
To be done nocturnally on OB.

N.C.B.H. and the B.G.S.M. as they will look at the completion of the current building program.

Much time during the senior year was spent working in the clinics

One particular clinic deserves mention and can be used as an example of the marked transition and development of our class through medical school. This was the psychiatry clinic where really for the first time we had "our own patient," who came to see us because we were "his doctor." I refer to psychiatry clinic because in this situation the full responsibility of being a doctor was so obvious. We, having been students for twenty years of our lives, now had to delicately help a troubled mind "by ourselves."

One could go through stories concerning the other various services but the common theme would be—the class was developing into young doctors. Our growth personally, was also paralleled by the growth, physically, of the institution where we were trained; for during our last year the Bowman Gray School of Medicine began its new building program.

The last part of this history contained few jokes, not because humor was lacking in the final year, but because the sobering effect of our future work was approaching. The Class of 1968 in retrospect has enjoyed being given the opportunity of having been trained in such a fine institution with so many inspiring and helpful instructors.

Our final word is one of thanks to all and a promise that we gladly look forward to being members of the medical profession and performing the highest and noblest service of all, helping another human being.

Respectfully submitted,
Alan J. Simpson

RESEARCH AND REVIEWS

Published once a year, Research and Reviews consists primarily of senior theses selected by the editorial board composed of three students. In addition to the senior papers, one article composed by a sophomore, dealing with some aspect of the history of medicine, is included. Also, the editors themselves review many recently published books which they believe will be of interest to the students.

Although Research and Reviews has been in existence since 1941, it was contributed to by the faculty until 1961. Since that time, however, it has been composed entirely of papers written by medical students and thus it is one of the few medical journals of its kind in the country.

Durward Pridgen, Associate Editor; John Whisnant, Editor; Charles Alexander, Associate Editor

Larry Redmond, Editor

Begun three years ago, SAMA Topics is the student newspaper which contains articles of general interest to all medical students as well as information about events occurring at the medical center. Both serious and satirical, it is contributed to by students, house-staff, and faculty members.

GRAY MATTER

This year book represents not only work by the individuals listed on these pages but also the co-operation of the entire senior class, for without their patience it would never have been possible.

While admittedly amateurish, it is hoped that this book will bring enjoyment both now and in years to come. I hope that in the future the 1968 Gray Matter will be a source of warm memories of the four years that we all spent together, for it was with this in mind that the book was composed.

S.A.M.A. OFFICERS: Paul Stagg, President, Donna Rook, Secretary, R. Mac Herring, Vice President, Leonard T. Heffner, Treasurer

S.A.M.A. provides the medical students with opportunities to talk informally with distinguished men in many fields of medicine.

Robert Hamill served as national S.A.M.A. vice-president during 1967-1968.

S.A.M.A. sponsors athletic events between both classes and individuals.

STUDENT AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

The Student American Medical Association, founded in Chicago in 1950, currently has over 60,000 active and affiliate members. SAMA is an autonomous organization whose purpose is "to represent and promote the collective interests of this organization, to advance the profession of medicine, to contribute to the welfare and education of medical students, interns and residents, to familiarize its members with the purposes and ideals of medicine, and to prepare its members to meet the social, moral, and ethical obligations of the medical profession."

As the Student Medical Society at Bowman Gray, SAMA aspires to provide a representative student government with active programs revolving around the academic, social, athletic, and general interest of the medical student's life.

Inaugurated four years ago, the S.A.M.A. preceptorship program enables freshmen and sophomore students to obtain some idea of what is involved during the clinical years.

S.A.M.A. forums serve to bring topics of interest before the medical students in an informal manner and serve as times when areas not directly concerned with hospital duties and practice may be discussed.

Phi Chi has been a successful fraternal group and an integral part in the life of the medical school since 1935. During this time it has provided a major social outlet for the students and house staff, and thanks to our talented cook for over 14 years, Catherine, has furnished the best home-cooked food obtainable within walking distance of the school.

As a service to the community, the upperclassmen, headed by an alumnus on the house staff, perform physical examinations for a local church and boys club sports programs.

In the coming year the fraternity house is to be moved from its present location to allow for the expansion of the medical center, and, as the medical school and hospital grow, so will Phi Chi, taking an even more active part in the extracurricular life of the school.

A sepia-toned photograph of a tree-lined path. In the foreground on the left, there is a black street lamp with a white, lantern-style light fixture. The path is paved and leads into the distance, flanked by tall, mature trees with dense foliage. The lighting is soft, suggesting a quiet time of day. The overall tone is nostalgic and serene.

DEDICATION

MISS MARY LOU REITZ

Miss Reitz and the class of 1968 arrived here at NCBH in 1965. Remembering what it was like to be a freshman, she "took us under her wing" and became our true friend. During that first frightening rotation to Fourth Main as freshmen, she gave us a smile and a word of encouragement at times when encouragement meant so much. Her effervescent enthusiasm and love for her work instilled in us a sincere respect for our profession.

She has shared our frustrations and disappointments and has even cried with us. When our junior year drew to a close and we received those precious black bands, she was there to share our happiness and to laugh with us.

During our senior year, Miss Reitz has continued to impress us with her ability to practice and teach nursing, her courtesy and kindness toward patients, and with her patience and understanding toward us. As we graduate and go our separate ways, we shall not forget what her friendship has meant to us.

It is with love that we dedicate this our yearbook to you, our friend, Miss Mary Lou Reitz.

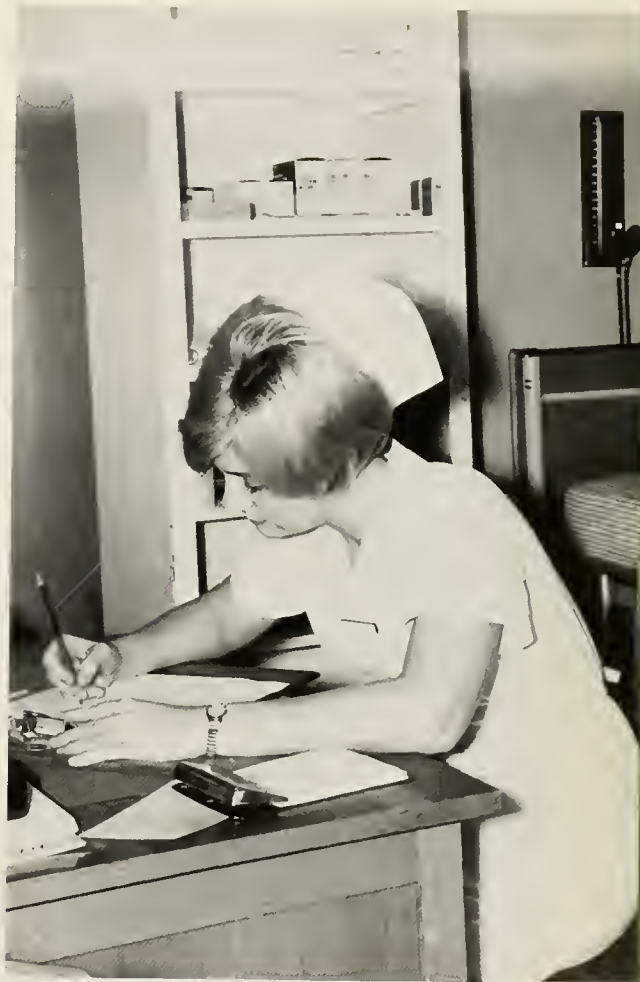

The Bliss of Growth

... from an excited and nervous freshman to an exuberant and trustworthy graduate. We arrived unaware of the frustration, long hours, and hard work that we, like our predecessors, were to endure. Quite unlike our precursors, we encountered limited work on the floors, closed study, and rapidly increasing quantities of knowledge to be gained. We leave realizing anew the fulfillment and dedication experienced by those of our profession since nursing began. Our growth has not ended but merely begun.

The Glory of Action

... from symbolizing a sick child's security to assuming life-saving responsibilities. From the nurses of yesterday, we received the basis for the principles of modern nursing techniques. We have observed, practiced, and finally developed the skills essential to the act of nursing. We must always move forward, listening and learning, never standing still. It is only through labor, energy, and resolute courage that we move on to better things.

The Splendor of Beauty

... from the beauty of new life to the serenity of death. We have marveled at the miracle of birth and the courage and peace of the dying. We see birth, the result of a deep and profound love, as a joyous beginning. We see death as the golden key that unlocks the gate to eternity. We, like nurses before us, are sensitive to this beauty because we can so vividly see the Great Physician at work.

For Yesterday is but a dream

And Tomorrow is only a vision;

But Today well lived makes

Every yesterday a Dream of Happiness,

And every tomorrow a Vision of Hope.

GRADUATION

The sweetest lives are those to duty wed,
Whose deeds both great and small
Are close-knit strands of an unbroken thread,
Where love ennoble all.
The world may sound no trumpets, ring no bells,
The Book of Life the slurring record tells.

Thy love shall chant its own beatitudes,
After its own like working. A child's kiss
Set on thy singing lips shall make thee glad;
A poor man served by thee shall make thee
rich;
A sick man helped by thee shall make thee strong;
Thou shalt be served thyself by every sense
Of service which thou renderest.

do you know . . .

that you are graduating into one of the most promising areas of the nation? A recent urban research study forecast "a linear city" for the 300 square miles stretching through the industrial Carolinas. Here, in the 20,000 square miles served by Duke Power, scores of thriving towns connect busy cities. Research centers, colleges and universities, and hundreds of industries thrive.

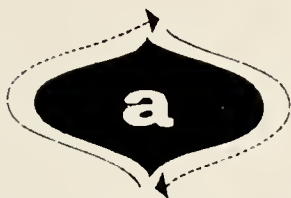

Here in the Carolinas Crescent, there is real challenge and opportunity. There is a place for you to fill, a job for you to do, in an exciting future that begins—right now.

U.S. Bombs Airlifted In North

SAIGON — U.S. military planes have been seen dropping bombs in North Vietnam, according to reports from the Communist press. The reports say that the U.S. is trying to destroy the North Vietnamese economy and military. The Communist press also says that the U.S. is trying to force the North Vietnamese to accept the Geneva accords.

For the second straight day, the U.S. military command reported that Communist forces had been seen dropping bombs in North Vietnam. The reports say that the U.S. is trying to destroy the North Vietnamese economy and military. The Communist press also says that the U.S. is trying to force the North Vietnamese to accept the Geneva accords.
